01 · THE PROJECT

Three villas, one horizon line.

Amphitheatrically set into a quiet slope above the Aegean, SENIL is a trilogy of semi-subterranean residences that do not sit on the landscape so much as emerge from it.

Designed by Aristides Dallas Architects, the three villas share an 8,300 m² plot in the Isterni uplands of northern Paros. Each residence is afforded full privacy, uninterrupted sea views, and exclusive outdoor grounds. This brochure presents Villa A — the Upper Villa — set highest on the hillside.

ISTERNI · PAROS

The quiet side of the island.

Set into the north-western hillside of Paros, Isterini is the island's most discreet address — a sparsely built stretch of coast facing the strait toward Antiparos. Naoussa's restaurants and harbour sit a short drive away; Parikia, the island's principal port, lies further south.

Top of the slope, edge of the sky.

Villa A occupies the highest position in the amphitheatre — 355.69 m² of living space arranged across a single horizontal plane. Six en-suite bedrooms, panoramic uninterrupted views, and the largest exclusive plot in the trilogy.

The horizontal reigns.

A single long horizontal, anchored by a green roof and stone retaining wall.

VILLAA · EXTERIOR

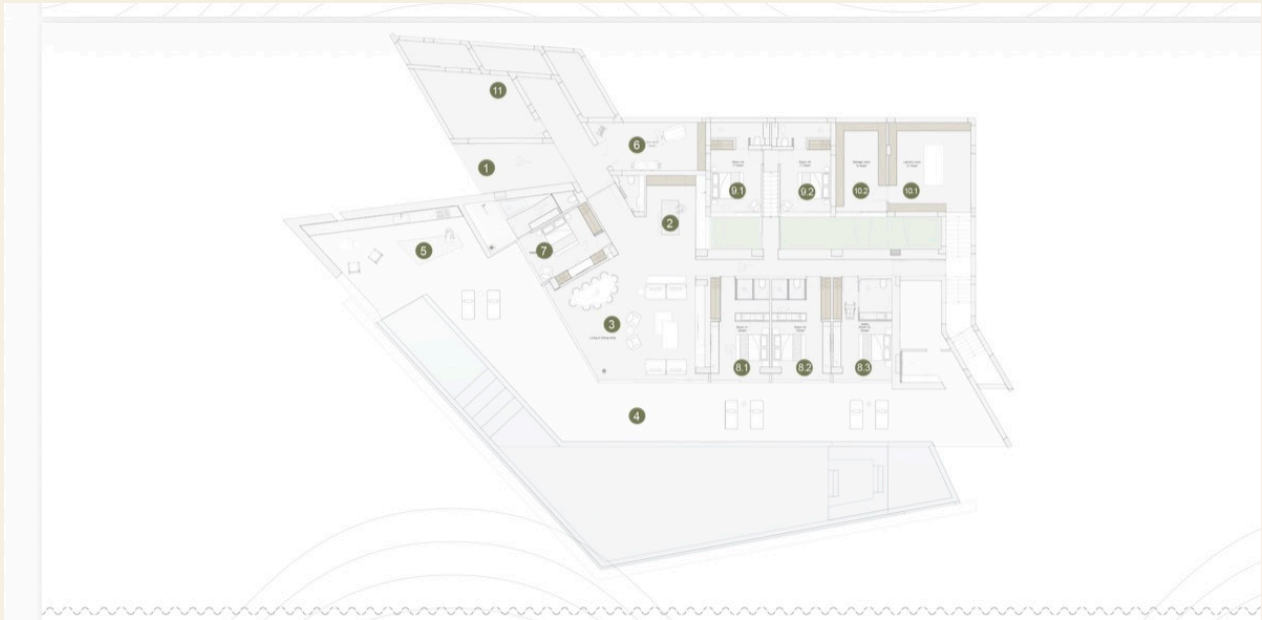

Villa A is defined by a single long roof plane that shelters the residence and continues the line of the hillside. Full-height glazing pulls the terrace, pool, and sea directly into every room. A planted green roof anchors the house into its landscape — the building is meant to be forgotten from above, revealed only from the sea.

ARCHITECTURE · ARISTIDES DALLAS

The plan, read as one line.

Villa A is laid out as a single horizontal gesture. The living, dining, and kitchen volumes open to the pool terrace at the west; the bedroom wing extends east along the hill. The master suite is set apart with its own sea-facing axis.

The team
behind the line.

Villa A is delivered through a carefully assembled group of specialist studios, each chosen for their restraint and craftsmanship. Their disciplines converge in a single unified gesture — architecture, interior & exterior detailing, engineering systems, lighting, and landscape working as one.

Quiet rooms, wide openings.

Travertine, pale timber, and plaster are the three materials of the main volume. A monolithic travertine island centres the kitchen; the living room aligns itself to the line of the pool and the sea beyond. Full-height sliders dissolve the threshold between inside and terrace.

Rooms for rest, framed by the sea.

The master suite occupies its own wing — a soft-lit volume panelled in dark timber, with a sea view held directly above the infinity pool. Four further bedrooms, each en-suite, line the eastern axis; one is designed to full PWD accessibility standards without compromising on finish or comfort.

The ground becomes a room.

The 2,488 m² of exclusive grounds are arranged as an extension of the interior. A private infinity pool runs the length of the residence, with an outdoor kitchen and dining pergola, sun-terrace, and BBQ station. The amphitheatric positioning ensures Villa A is seen by none of its neighbours — only by the sea.

SEASIDE

The ground becomes a room.

Across all three villas, exclusive grounds are arranged as an extension of the interior. Each residence has a private infinity pool, outdoor kitchen, BBQ station, fire pit and pergola-covered dining terrace.

OUTDOOR LIVING

A home that holds the hour.

Beyond the primary rooms, Villa A is outfitted as a full residence: a private gym, a secondary media lounge, and a softer-lit evening plan that turns the house inward as the light falls. The infinity pool, held against the horizon, anchors every room to the water.
